12a) It is usual for the scores in the home and away matches between the same teams to be different.

12b) There are many reasons for this. Accept any of:

- Teams usually play better on their own ground where:
 - they are familiar with the surroundings
 - they have the support of most of the crowd
 - they are less tired from travelling.
- Either team might not have the same players for both matches because of:
 - injuries
 - transfers in or out of the club
 - suspensions.
- Some players might be playing with a slight injury or feeling unwell, causing them to play less well in one of the matches.
- Either team might also have improved or deteriorated because:
 - it has learned from the first match between of the two teams and altered its tactics
 - of changes in form and confidence
 - of a change of coach.
- Either team might have better luck with the bounce of the ball or the referee's decisions in one of the matches.
- Either team might have players sent to the sin-bin or sent off in one of the matches.
- The pitch or weather conditions might favour a team more in one of the matches. For example:
 - dry conditions might favour a good passing team or a team with faster backs
 - muddy conditions might favour the team that has stronger forwards.

5. B Every team played some other teams once and some twice.

6a) child's choice of yes / not entirely / no.

6b) Logical explanation of child's choice for 6a above; suggest:

If 'yes': It is fair because all the teams played the same number of matches, including all the others at least once, and enough matches were played to produce a fair order showing the standard of the teams.

If 'not entirely': It is fair that the teams played the same number of matches but they should have played all the teams the same number of times as some teams might have played most of the stronger teams twice whilst others might have played most of the weaker teams twice.

If 'no': It is unfair because some teams might have played most of the stronger teams twice whilst others might have played most of the weaker teams twice.

7a)

Change to League Table	Might have happened	Very unlikely
Huddersfield would not have been champions		/
Dewsbury would have finished higher	/
Keighley Cougars would have finished higher		/
Workington would have finished lower	/
Gateshead would not have finished bottom		/

7b) Some of the above might have happened because it would not have taken many points to achieve the changes. Dewsbury were level on points with Oldham, immediately above them. Workington were level on points with Sheffield and only one ahead of Barrow immediately below them.

7c) Some of the above are very unlikely because it would have taken a large number of points to achieve the changes. Leigh would have needed to gain at least ten more points than Huddersfield, requiring them win five times whilst Huddersfield lost five times – most unlikely as Huddersfield had not lost all season. Similarly, Keighley would have needed to gain eleven points on Barrow; Gateshead, having managed only one point in 27 games, would have needed to pull back at least six points on Hunslet.

Pupil Activity Sheet 7: Match Results 1914-15

- Saturday
- Most matches were played on Saturdays because it is a weekend day when most adults were not at work, at least in the afternoons, and children were not at school so they are able to attend the matches, giving the club higher crowds and more gate money.
